Nick arrived home one day with the widest smile you've ever seen.

“I got the job at the Holy Molar Company,” he proclaimed to his wife.

I am going to be in charge of filling all the toothpaste tubes!

I start on Monday!”

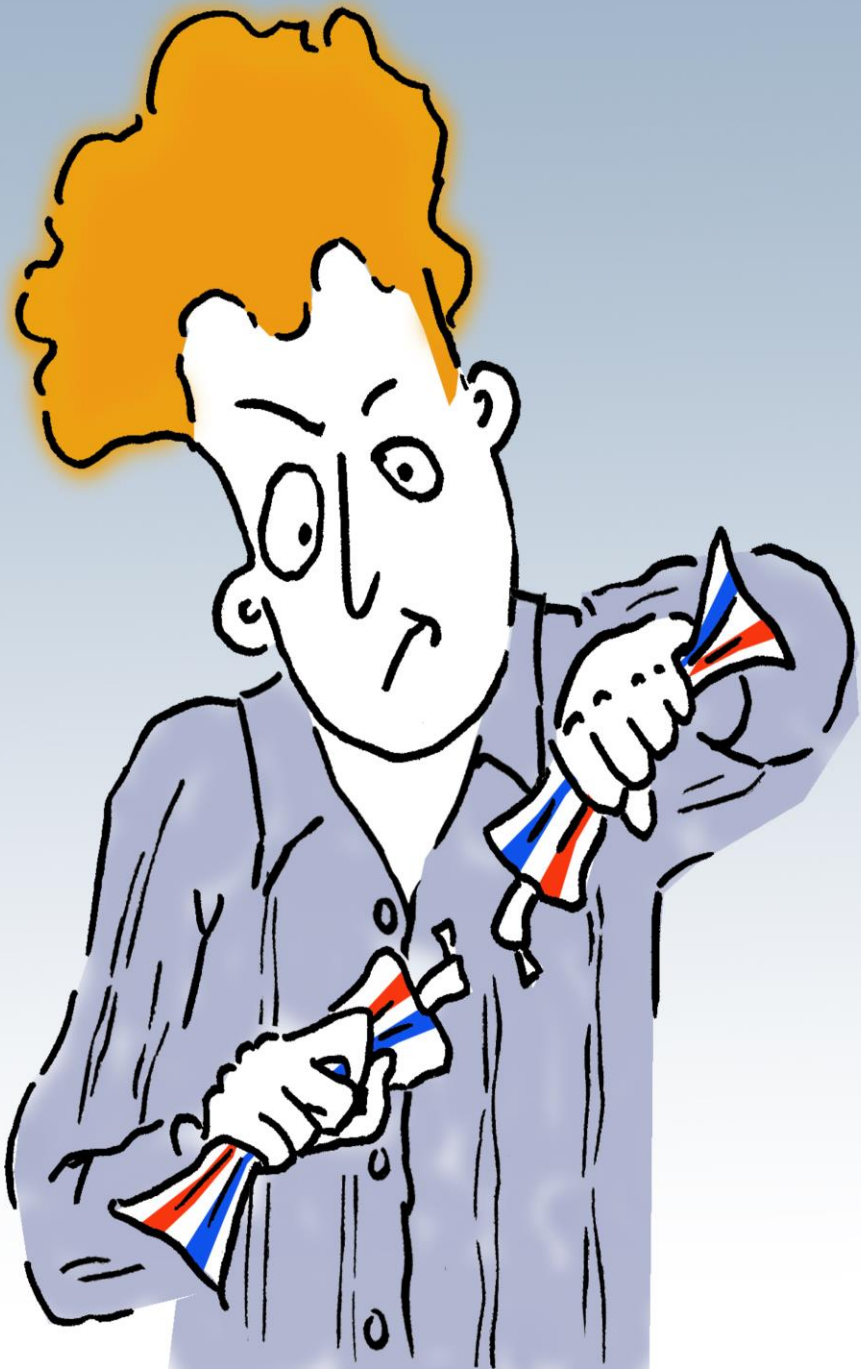

That night, Nick couldn't sleep at all.

He pictured himself wearing a brand new lab coat.

He would get just the right amount of toothpaste into each and every tube!

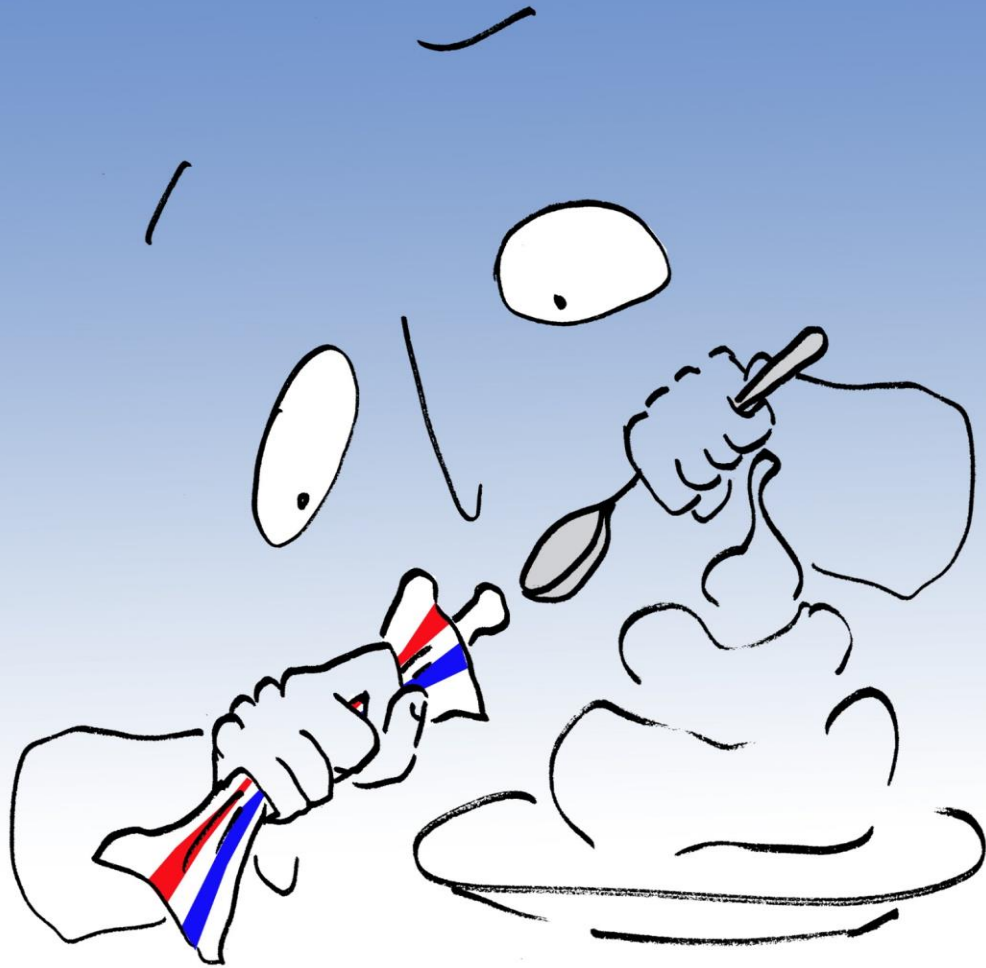

But how?

He squeezed the paste out of one tube.

He tried to push it back in.

He tried and tried and tried but the toothpaste stayed outside.

He tried a spoon.

A straw.

A hammer.

A saw.

Blowing, pushing, filling,
drilling.

He tried and tried and tried
but the toothpaste stayed outside.

“I know,” said Nick.

“I need to practice first with bigger holes.

Nick raced to the store to buy more toothpaste.

Back home, Nick filled a shoe.

And then he filled two.

And then he ran back to the store to buy even more.

Nick filled the sink, the chimney and all the pots and pans.

He was ready.

On Monday, Nick smiled as he walked to the office.

“May I begin right away?”
he asked.

“So sorry,” said the boss.

“Someone has been buying all our toothpaste.

We have run out of paste and tubes!

Please come back in a month or two or three.”

Nick’s grin suddenly disappeared.

But when he came home the next day, his smile was wider than ever.

“You won’t believe my luck,” he told his wife.

On Monday I start a new job at the Will-O-Pillow Company.”

“Let me guess.

You’ll be putting all the feathers
into every single pillow.”

Nick nodded.

“How did you know?”

“I just knew,” she smiled.

“But this time, please don’t try it
in the house!”
