Ten Bottles

Ten people lived in a village.* They decided to celebrate* the New Year together. "We will meet under the tall tree on the last evening of the year," they said. "We will drink warm, sweet apple juice* and hope for a sweet year."

They were all poor, and none of them had enough apple juice for everyone, so they agreed* to bring one bottle each.* Then they would pour* it all into a big bowl* and warm it on the fire.

On the day of the party, each person thought, "My apple juice is too nice to share. I will bring water instead, and nobody will know."

At the party, they poured their juice into a big bowl on the fire. Instead of ten bottles of juice, they had ten bottles of water. As they drank hot water at their party, they all felt ashamed* of themselves.
